*It's starting!

This is my third series to be collected into graphic novels. Forgive me if this sounds reckless, but the thing I prioritize most when drawing manga is creating something that I can enjoy. This one might not remain popular, but for now, I'll just be happy if everyone finds it as fun as I do.

BEHIND THE SCENES

Drawing a single frontal shot of him uses up one or two pen nibs. He's terrible for my fuel economy.

I thought he was really cool when I first drew him, but at the meeting with the editorial department, they said, "Who'd look up to this old guy? I don't wanna be like him," and "Wouldn't he be better as a pretty boy?" My manga buddies said, "Who's this weird, cheerful old dude?" But their criticism only fanned my flames. Thanks to them, now I give it my all when drawing him. So thanks for that, guys.

THE SUPPLEMENT

The whites of his eyes are all black when in his True Form (skinny). He's so gaunt that they're perpetually in shadow. Only his pupils glisten, reflecting the true strength and dignity of this "symbol of peace." It's like everything that his Muscle Form represents is condensed into those pupils. But I'm really not a good enough artist to properly express that. Sorry.
